The Japanese Medical Society of America (JMSA) was originally established in 1973 as Japanese Medical Society of New York. Our members include medical professionals, dentist, nurses, other healthcare workers, residents, students and friends.

The Society administers and distributes a variety of scholarships to students and trainees in order to help defray the cost of education. We also mentor them for community oriented projects to groom our future medical professionals.

Through JMSA Community Outreach Program, we support many programs and groups which provide valuable services to the community through information sharing and support groups. We also organize medical lecture series which give chances for the community to discuss important health care issues with JMSA medical professionals.

Finally, our Japan Relief Program have supported "Kokoro-no-Care" or mental health clinics caring for emotional wellbeing of the disaster stricken community since March 11, 2011. Core networking groups including American Airlines, Columbia University, Fukushima Medical University, IMCRA, JAMSNET, Japan Society, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of Japan, Mount Sinai Global Health, Rotary International, and US-Japan Foundation represent an unique collaboration from New York to collectively support the local efforts in Tohoku region by covering various operation aspects.

We are much honored for the Asian American Federation’s Community Service Award, and we hope to live up to our commendations.
